Dear Cool Ghoul:

Enjoyed the first issue of FOR MONSTERS ONLY, as did my four-year-old son, Joey Mark. Here are four photos of Joey doing a take-off on Lon Chaney, Sr. sans make-up (as seen on page nine of the first issue). He wants to be a monster when he grows up. I think he acts like a little monster right now.

Olga Gomez
Flushing, N.Y.

If he's ever in Transylvania, tell him to look us up. We may have a part for him in our new movie, "Frankenstein Goes to Nursery School."

Dear Fiends:

Just finished reading the first issue of FOR MONSTERS ONLY, and it really was a large scream. Especially got a kick out of the article "A Monster is Reborn." I would like to hire Bela Fangman's rock 'n' roll group for a little coming-out party I'm tossing next month. My Aunt Zombalo is coming out of her tomb.

Richard Withers
Chicago, Illinois

Sorry, but Bela is booked solid for the next ten months. Most of his dates are at local blood banks.

Dear F.M.C.:

I'm writing you this letter in hopes that you'll be able to help me. I'm only 158 years old, but I'm still single. I'm six feet nine inches tall, and my measurements are 38-24-78. Hair: black and green; eyes: three. Maybe you can find a husband for me. Please try, I'm not getting any younger.

Mary Ann Yardly
Washington, D.C.

Why don't you enter our next Transylvanian Beauty Contest. You sound like a winner!

Dear Bats:

I laughed so much over the article "Monster Mother Goose" that the straps on my straight-jacket almost opened.

Alan Sacks
San Diego, Calif.

Is your straight-jacket the old type with the belt in the back?

Dear Grave Robbers:

Do you know what happened to that fabulous monster, the Blob? I haven't seen him around the pool-room in months now.

Bill Fleming
Seattle, Wash.

We don't know, but have you tried the F.B.I.—Fiends' Bureau of Investigation?

Dear Things That Scream in the Night:

Enclosed find a message I found in an old, dust-covered mummy case on a recent trip to the famous King Tut-tu-ton's tomb in Egypt. Can you translate it for me?

Sue Goodman
Brooklyn, N.Y.

Yes. It says: "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but Feamish Kreal will never hurt me."

Dear Editor:

I enjoyed your magazine very much. Keep up the tremendous work. Here's a little poem I wrote one moonless night when the rain was beating down on our castle windows:

Roses are red,
Violets are blue.
Sugar is sweet,
And so are bat wings
Dipped in vampire stew.

Do you like it?

Steve Belous
St. Louis, Mo.

I've heard verse.

Dear Ghoul:

Your new magazine is absolutely a masterpiece of fun and fright. I couldn't put it down for hours. Then I re-read it again and again. The feature, "Art Gallery of Classic Chill-ers" was great, and so were the cartoons.

Tommy Foster
Valley Stream, N.Y.

Glad you liked the cartoons. All our cartoons are new, but our cartoonists are in their 80's, 180's that is!

Dear Editors:

All we monsters in Mexico send you our best wishes. We read your article entitled "Mucho Monsters from Mexico" four or five times. It was gigantic!

Jose Gomez
Carlos Chazzo
Pepito Cugat
Mexico City, Mexico

Ole! Good to hear from our fine friends south of the border. If you're ever in Transylvania, drop by our office. We'll have plenty of rice, red beans and no-cal chilli for you.

Dear Stake-hearted:

You have a jim-dandy magazine. It's a gasser. Do more jazz on the Transylvanian family album. There must be many more great photo albums in monsterland that you could use. How about Count Dracula's?

Frank Carterbow
Detroit, Mich.

We asked the Count if we could use his album. He said he was sorry, but the lock on his album was much too rusty to open.

Dear Sirs:

I would like an autographed photo of those two handsome, teen-aged stars you featured in your story, "The Transylvanian T.V. Scene." They're cute!

Helen Smote
Tampa, Florida

Thanks for the letter, but those two are no longer working on Transylvania TV. The producer said they both flew away one day and haven't been heard of since.

Dear Castle Dwellers:

Here's a drawing I did with an old wooden stake dipped in peanut butter. It's a picture of my school teacher. Can I get a job doing artwork for your magazine?

Phyllis Goldberg
Salt Lake City, Utah

No. All our artists are under contract, and lock and key!

Dear Editor:

I felt I had to write to tell you how pleased I am with your new magazine, FOR MONSTERS ONLY. I found it a welcome relief from all the other magazines of this sort, with their haphazard humor and puns, which you have eliminated from your magazine. Your material is presented in a good journalistic form, with all the jokes and humor set aside in their own sections. I'm interested in FOR MONSTERS ONLY more than if I were just a fan. I'm part of a motion picture company, on the amateur level, producing films mainly in the science fiction and horror genre, such as BATTLE ON THE MOON (photos enclosed), CURSE OF THE MUMMY'S TREASURE, and PROJECT X. Best of luck in the future.

Richard Pomeroy
Seattle, Wash.

We showed your pictures around the office and all the folks thought they were great, especially Count Dracula. He claims the guy looks like one of his old victims, of whom he was quite fond!

Dear Editor:

Would you please tell me where I can get in touch with the nice man with the basket on page 21 of your magazine? He looks like my long, lost uncle—Wolfgang Zebb. He left home ten years ago to get a haircut; but by the looks of him, he still needs one.

Lila Dunn
Woodside, N.Y.

You're mistaken! That's not Wolfgang Zebb. That photo is Greggo Felmt, vocal coach for the Beatles.

Dear Sirs:

My name is James Jones, I'm 12 years old and I'd like it very much if you would publish my letter in your great mag. I think your mag tops them all. Could you print the enclosed picture of me as Frankenstein? I've made monster films, and I'm monster-crazy. Your mag is my favorite. Keep up the good work.

Yours ghoulishly,
Dracula Jones
Fort Worth, Texas

You keep up the good work too, and we're sure they'll make you "Monster of the Year."

"HOW WE RETIRED IN 135 YEARS WITH $5.10 A MONTH IN TRANSYLVANIA."

"Look at us! What do you mean 'UGH'? We're retired and we're having a big, fat ball. A fish story? Well, okay! Did you hear about the guy who went fishing? When he got back to the lake, he discovered that he had no bait. He cut a picture of a fly out of a magazine and used it for bait. Know what he caught? A picture of fresh water bass! Hee! Hee! Hee! Now back to the serious junk. I started thinking about retiring in 1806. Felma, my wife, thought I was silly. Our dream seemed so far away. 'And besides,' Felma said, 'it makes me feel so old.' I'm only 207 years old, you know! We just spent 263 days visiting with Felma's Aunt Zoppa and Uncle Gluck. Uncle Gluck had turned 319 during the war (the War of the Roses), and his working days were over. (He was a certified public grave-robber.) Fortunately, he had put some money aside ($15.38) for a foggy day. This got me to thinking about Felma and myself. I did some investigating, and in answer to my inquiry, I received a booklet from Transylvania Mutual. I read it and liked it right away. I signed up, and received my first check six months ago. Last month we moved to Lake Glob, and we love it. I'm having the time of my life now, and it's all because of Transylvania Mutual."

The immortal Bela Lugosi in the 1956 United Artists' thriller, THE BLACK SLEEP. The skull belonged to a late friend who went on a very strict diet.

THE BELA LUGOSI STORY

BY RICHARD BOJARSKI

THROUGHOUT the history of the "horror" film, there have been various Horror Stars to create shudders in the audience and gold at the box office. One of these, the great Bela Lugosi, has established a place all his own in the supernatural world of the celluloid. The rich, Continental accent of his voice, his dark, sensitive, European features, and his cultivated manners tinged with overtones of suppressed evil, created a fascinating, specialized type of Old World eeriness. Despite a previous classical acting career in Europe, his successful portrayal of "DRACULA" in the film of the same name made the name of Bela Lugosi synonymous with vampires and other spectral forms, causing him to be "typed" as a HORROR performer from that time on, like his famous contemporary, Boris Karloff.

Born Bela Blasko on October 20, 1882 in Lugos, Hungary, he was the only child of Paula (von Vojnics) and Stephen Blasko, an upper-middle class family. At a youthful age, Bela chose to enter the acting profession and subsequently enrolled in the Academy of Theatrical Arts in Budapest. In 1900 he made his professional debut as Romeo in Shakespeare's "ROMEO AND JULIET" at the Royal National Theatre. Several years later, he became one of the leading romantic idols of the National Theatre of Hungary, whose repertoire included Ibsen and Hamlet, an experience he reminisced happily upon in later years.

His film career began in 1910 in Germany, but most of his European films were for the Star and Phoenix Company in Budapest. At the beginning of World War I, in 1914, Lugosi enlisted in the Hungarian Army; later he was promoted to Lieutenant. He then served two years on the Serbian frontier, and later was reassigned to Russia. During a battle, he was wounded three times, and almost lost his life in the act of trying to save a comrade's. At the cessation of hostilities in 1918, Lugosi left the service as Captain and accepted a governmental position in the administration of the theatre in Budapest. When the war-weakened government was overthrown by Communistic revolutionaries, Lugosi was forced to flee for his life because of his democratic sympathies. In Germany, his film credits revealed a brief attempt to resume his acting career. "NECKLACE OF THE DEAD" marked his first appearance in a horror film. He portrayed Uncas in "THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS" and appeared in an interesting version of Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde in "JANUS-KORF," starring Conrad Veidt and directed by F. W. MURNAU. But, still unsure of his personal safety, Lugosi decided to leave the Continent and start afresh in the U.S. After obtaining a job as an assistant engineer on a cargo vessel in Italy, he arrived in New Orleans in early 1921. Despite his complete unfamiliarity with our language, he declared himself as a political refugee to the authorities.

Here we have Lugosi and Boris Karloff in a scene from the RKO classic, BODY SNATCHERS. This movie was originally released in 1945, but it can now be seen on TV Station E.E.C.K. in Transylvania.

Lon Chaney, Jr. and Bela in a scene from the chiller, "The Black Sleep" (United Artists). Lon and Bela teamed up often to bring many giant thrills to audiences the world over.

and worked his way to New York City where he organized his own Hungarian Stock Company. (He was the producer, director and star!)

Eventually, a producer sized up Lugosi for a part in his new play, "THE RED POPPY." Though the producer was aghast at discovering Lugosi's English was limited to a few words, he was determined to improve Bela's speech, so certain was he of Lugosi for the role of Fernando. During the next three months preceding the play's opening, Lugosi was subjected to a linguistic tutor until he had his lines letter-perfect. Despite his performance and the play's receiving good notices, the public and the critics were unaware that Bela had only a general knowledge of the dialogue. They didn't realize that he had learned his lines by ear (phonetically). Not long after, he was approached for a supporting role (a spy) in his first U.S. film, Fox's "THE SILENT COMMAND" (1923). The following year, he married the former Beatrice Weeks of San Francisco. During this period his English improved as he alternated his film work with stage roles such as the Sheikh of Hammen in "ARABESQUE," Sergius Cheroff in "OPEN HOUSE," and Father Petros in "DEVIL IN THE CHEESE" (with Fredric March). His successive stage roles began to slant towards the villainous side, as evidenced in his first horror play, "THE WEREWOLF."

In 1927, the die was finally cast for Lugosi when he was chosen by producer Horace Liveright for the leading role in "DRACULA" over four other possible players (two of which were Conrad Veidt and Paul Muni). What made the choice so ironically right for Lugosi was the fact that he had been raised in the legendary vampire mountains of Transylvania. The play, which opened on October 27 of that year, was a success. One critic exclaimed: "Haven't seen anything as terrifying as this since 'THE BAT!'" After 500 performances on the Broadway stage, Lugosi toured the U.S. Following two years of his role as "DRACULA," he returned to film work. But here his career seemed to receive a setback. His roles were small and insignificant, possibly due to both the industry's change-over to sound and Lugosi's still imperfect English. His only film worth noting was the MGM thriller, "THE THIRTEENTH CHAIR" which was the beginning of his association with director Tod Browning. During this year, his marriage to Beatrice having ended, Lugosi married his former secretary, Lillian Arch.

The following year, his roles improved, and in October of 1930 he was signed for the film version of "DRACULA" by Carl Laemmle, Jr., and was given a 5 year contract by Universal. The studio invested $400,000 in the production, most of which was spent in creating the weird sets, notably Dracula's crumbling Transylvanian Castle. Released in February of 1931 to an enthusiastic audience, this early "terror" talkie was a landmark, for it was the first "chiller" that didn't reveal its mysticism as the source of some carefully-conceived human activity. "DRACULA" was the peak of Lugosi's career, and a role in which he was to be identified with until the end of his life. Immediately after this, he was tested for the role of the Monster for "FRANKENSTEIN." His make-up was completely unlike the Monster that Karloff ultimately played. Lugosi's make-up resembled the "GOLEM" character in the film of the same name. The following year, Universal starred him in one of their earliest Poe adaptations, "MURDERS IN THE RUE MORGUE." He portrayed Dr. Mirakle, sideshow owner of a murdering gorilla. Aside from an interesting similarity to the German film, "CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI," the film had some exceptionally repelling laboratory sequences with Arlene Francis, who played one of Lugosi's victims.

His next important film was "WHITE ZOMBIE," which was probably the biggest and best of all the zombie films. He played a plantation overseer who uses voodoo powers to raise corpses from their graves to obey his evil commands. Its skillful camera-work and tropical settings established it as the most interesting study of voodooism thus far. That same year, he appeared in "ISLAND OF LOST SOULS" (Paramount), as a leader of a pack of animal-men who finally revolt against Dr. Moreau (Charles Laughton), whose experiments resulted in their horrible physical state. Lugosi's features were barely recognizable beneath a thick layer of hair, and his brief scenes made his role almost secondary to the rest of the cast.

His next film of any consequence was the stylish "THE BLACK CAT" (1934). In this Universal essay on Devil worshippers, Lugosi was teamed with Boris Karloff, who portrayed the leader of this evil cult. In one of his rare sympathetic roles as Dr. Vitus Verdegast, Lugosi blows up himself and Karloff after skinning the latter alive! This was the second and best of his films with Karloff. Their next together, "THE RAVEN," was another Poe adaptation. Lugosi played the mad, brilliant Dr. Vollin, who quoted Poe's lines outrageously and forced Karloff to do his evil bidding by paralyzing one side of Karloff's face! Their last together, during the mid-30's, was "THE INVISIBLE RAY" (1936), an excellent science fiction-horror film of its type. In this one, he was a sympathetic scientist killed by his former colleague-gone-mad, Karloff.

The following year, England prohibited horror films completely; thus, Hollywood ceased production on all future films of that genre. Lugosi assumed that he would get an opportunity for some "straight" roles. Unfortunately, his typed "horror" image caused him to be seen in nothing else. After a period of forced inactivity, Lugosi's economic situation worsened when he and his pregnant wife sold their large home to pay their debts and moved into a small apartment. Not long after, Lugosi applied for unemployment insurance. His only son, Bela, Jr., was born that same year. Fortunately, at this time, public interest in horror films was revived by the theatrical reissue of "FRANKENSTEIN" and "DRACULA." Encouraged by this, Hollywood began to start production of new horror films. Lugosi was thereby rescued from his unfortunate situation, and the second talkie horror film cycle was born.

Returning to Universal, he completed the serial, "THE PHANTOM CREEPS," and immediately rushed into "THE SON OF FRANKENSTEIN" (1939), in which he was teamed with his old co-star, Karloff. In this third Frankenstein film of the series, Lugosi gave a memorable evil performance as Igor, the crazed, crippled blacksmith who uses the Monster as an instrument to murder his enemies. It was his best remembered role since "DRACULA." He then went to England to make a film for the second time. In this Monogram chiller, "THE HUMAN MONSTER," Lugosi played two roles. Disguised as a blind keeper of a Home For The Blind, he methodically murdered inmates with the aid of a horribly deformed, blind assistant, after first making his victims sign over all their money to his other and real self. Returning to America, he appeared in an RKO-Kay Kyser spoof on horror films called

This remarkable photo shows Bela having his pulse checked after playing a scene under the spell of a fellow actor. Bela was a great believer in realism for the many parts he portrayed.

"YOU'LL FIND OUT," with Karloff and Peter Lorre. In "BLACK FRIDAY" (Universal), his type-casting deviated when he was cast as a gangster. Though he was overshadowed by Karloff and Stanley Ridges, his one scene, where he was suffocated to death in a clothes closet, was chillingly realistic, especially when publicity releases revealed that he was actually hypnotized (by a noted hypnotist) prior to filming to heighten the realism! In his next, "THE WOLFMAN" (1941), he had a small but effective role in this rather well-done tale of a Werewolf who terrorized the small, English village of Lanwelly.

That same year, Lugosi began an association with Monogram Studios, a small-budget "quickie" outfit that lasted until 1944. Despite his starring roles, these films did little except cheapen Lugosi's reputation in films. In a few of these, such as "SPOOKS RUN WILD" with the East Side Kids, and "THE CORPSE VANISHES" (1941), Lugosi was teamed with an old woman (Minerva Urecal), her ugly son (Frank Moran) and a dwarf. This team provided an interesting ghoulish relationship which, unfortunately, was not exploited beyond their two or three films together. This decline, however, was brightened by co-starring roles in "THE GHOST OF FRANKENSTEIN" (Universal, 1942), in which he re-created the role of Igor; "FRANKENSTEIN MEETS THE WOLFMAN" (Universal, 1943), a first-rate sequel to "THE WOLFMAN," in which he portrayed the "Monster"; and a starring role in Columbia's "RETURN OF THE VAMPIRE" (1944). During this year, he returned to the stage after his long absence to star as Jonathan Brewster in "ARSENIC AND OLD LACE." He played the role originally created by Boris Karloff. The next year he appeared in the best of the Val Lewton-RKO shockers, "THE BODY SNATCHERS." Though his role was small, the sinister scene in which Karloff intoxicates him before killing him, was a macabre highlight of the film. It was their last film together. The horror film cycle, coming to a close about then, reduced Lugosi's appearances and quality. One of these, a mediocre independent film, "SCARED TO DEATH," deserves mention for the solitary reason that it was Lugosi's only color film (Cinecolor).

A bright period during this time occurred when he was asked to recreate his original "DRACULA" role for Universal's spoof, "ABBOTT AND COSTELLO MEET FRANKENSTEIN" in 1948. The result, an interesting and successful satire, turned out remarkably well, and much to Lugosi's relief, did not injure the dignity of his "DRACULA" character. To keep working, he brought over his stage production of "DRACULA" to England in 1951 for the first time. (By this time, he had played the role on the stage over a 1,000 times.) At times it might be said that he lived the part off-stage. During his many stage tours, his bad back would be aggravated by the hard mattresses in most of the hotels. Using ingenuity, he would make arrangements to have his stage prop coffin sent to his hotel room, where he would spend the remainder of the evening sleeping in it. Before leaving England, Lugosi completed a film, "VAMPIRES OVER LON-DON." Because it was thought that British humor in the film wouldn't be understood by American audiences, it was never released here.

The next few years were depressing ones for Lugosi, when producers unjustly labelled him a "has-been," and when the horror film lost its appeal. In addition to being out of work, his third wife divorced him. The reinterest in horror films caused by the success of Warner Brothers' "THE HOUSE OF WAX" (1953), raised Lugosi's spirits briefly. He had always wanted to remake "DRACULA" in color and wide screen. But his dream of a comeback never materialized. In 1955 the world was startled when newspaper headlines revealed that Lugosi was a victim of drug addiction. Upon voluntarily committing himself to the Los Angeles Metropolitan Hospital, he disclosed that he had become addicted to drugs accidentally seventeen years ago when he used them to deaden leg pains. Lugosi added that the half-million dollars which he had earned in films was all spent, leaving him penniless. Following his release nearly three months later with a clean bill of health, he married the former Hope Lininger, a studio clerk who had been writing him fan letters for twenty years. His fortunes seemed on the rise when he was offered a small role in United Artists' "THE BLACK SLEEP." Before the completion of his next film, "PLAN 9 FROM OUTER SPACE," he died of a heart attack in his small apartment on August 16, 1956. A double was substituted for the rest of his scenes. He was buried in Holy Cross Cemetery wearing his "DRACULA" cape in honor of the role which earned him his greatest fame.

Not many people knew that Lugosi, off-screen, was a cultured, sensitive individual who possessed a keen

At home, Bela relaxes at one of his favorite past-times, reading. Bela's other hobbies included pipe collecting and painting.

With terror in his eyes, Lugosi is seen in the mystery-packed film by Columbia, THE RETURN OF THE VAMPIRE (1944). In the world of horror, there will never be another Bela Lugosi.

sense of humor and appreciated good cigars. He was also well-read and kept up daily with world affairs. Fellow vampire actor John Carradine sadly remarked of his great friend, following Lugosi's death: "He was a craftsman. I've known him for twenty-five years. He was a considerate and kind gentleman. As for the parts we both played, he was the better vampire. He had a fine pair of eyes. Nobody will ever be able to fill his shoes. He will be missed by us all."

HERCULES AND THE PRINCESS OF TROY

AN EMBASSY PICTURES RELEASE

REVIEWED BY WANDA GLUGG
TRANSYLVANIA TIMES MOVIE CRITIC
AND COFFEE BREAK CHAMPION

Hercules, played by Gordon Scott, is seen battling a spectacular, twenty-five foot long sea monster, played by Arnold Z Ychho. Ychho needed very little make-up for this role.

I bet you're wondering what happened to Hercules' horse. Ychho swallowed him, saddle and all.

Now I bet you're wondering what happened to Hercules. He's back in the saddle (inside good, old Ychho of course).

GO SEE IT!
IT'S GREAT MOVIE!

A GRAB BAG OF TRANSYLVANIAN MONSTERS-

Coming up for his coffee break is Harry Hand. Harry last worked in Paramount's top scream production, DR. TERROR'S HOUSE OF HORRORS.

UPI PHOTO

Here we have that super, duper monster, the Hunchback of Notre Dame (Lon Chaney, Sr.), refusing to pay his five dollar parking fine. Next case! (Universal Pictures)

Lon Chaney as the evil PHANTOM OF THE OPERA. The two guys and gal are two of his students who were too smashed for their vocal lessons. (Universal Pictures)

The guy with the king-size cigarette lighter is Lon Chaney, Jr. The movie in which he made an ash of himself was WITCHCRAFT, released by 20th Century-Fox, or as they say in Transylvania 20th Century-Werewolf.

Around and around Lon Chaney goes. The movie is "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" (Universal). The make-up Lon wore in this film was really amazing. It took him six hours to put it on (four hours if he'd used both hands)!

Marvin Sturdly after partaking of some rare Transylvania juice. The juice, of course, was made by Dr. Jekyll. Marvin is now a happy man; he gets to swim and chase fishermen all day long. Hang in there, Marv!

DINOSAURUS is the movie. Seen taking his girl home from the school prom is cave man Gregg Martell; his date is Kristina Hanson.

MARTIN'S SCREAMS

Here are 5 cartoons from the ink-stained hands of one of the great cartoonists of all time, VIC MARTIN. He was born in 1709 and is still going strong!

"Gee! Wish I could meet a girl like that!"

"I'll be with you in a minute, Soglu. I'm just trimming my toe nails."

"Just ask her if she's free to baby-sit tonight. Don't tell her who it is until she says yes!"

"HELP!"

the GREATEST MONSTER BATTLE of ALL TIME!

"I can beat you with one arm tied behind my back!"

"Not on TOP of the Empire
State Building you couldn't, you big plug for a gasoline company!"

"For an OLD man, you fight pretty good!"

"'Fight clean' my manager
keeps telling me. CLEAN?
He must be some kind of nut!"

"Yeah! And today's my BIRTH-DAY. I'm 2,073 years young—take or give a few hundred years here and there!"

"Take that back! I never fumbled the ball in a FOOTBALL GAME in all my life!"

"Let go! You win! You're making my face turn a sickly HUMAN color!"

"Don't mess with me, Mac, or I'll give you such a shot that you'll have to go to the BLOOD BANK every day for the next 3 months!"

"Whom do you like?"

"I think the guy in the green scales looks good. He's fast on his FINS!"

"Yeah? Who let YOU off your leash,
dogface?"

"GET ME CLAY! GET ME
CLAY! Not the boxer! Real
MUD CLAY! I hurt my left hand! ... My, that smarts!"

"FOUL! FOUL! The Purple Slob just hit me
below my fangs!"

"What do you mean,
You're gonna close my three eyes? Your mother wears Army horseshoes!"

"I think I trained for this fight too long. I'm just BONES AND BONES!"

FIGHT OF THE CENTURY

In the left corner, weighing a mess, is "Kid" Brontosaurus. In the right corner, we have "Terror" Tyrannosaurus Rex, who weighs in at 12 tons, give or take a few pounds.

Our referee for today's main event is Caveman Gregg Martell.

Round one . . . Out of his corner charges "Terror" Tyrannosaurus. He leads with a right, and a left and a right. "Kid" Brontosaurus looks like he's stuck in the mud . . .

Round two . . . The "Terror" circles to his left. The "Kid" seems tired. Oh! Oh! Oh! It looks as if the "Terror" is starting to make his move . . .
